Edgar Filing: NOVA MEASURING INSTRUMENTS LTD - Form 6-K

Dr. Giora Dishon, President & CEO of Nova commented, Overall, as we discussed in the guidance provided on April 12, the sharp decrease in the first quarter over previous quarters is as a result of the general slowdown that the industry is currently experiencing. This has affected us through several push-outs, delays of customers orders, and deliveries that were not recognized as revenues during the quarter. Furthermore, the one-quarter delay in the introduction of our new product, the NovaScan 3090, also contributed to the revenue shortfall.

Dr. Dishon continued, As we previously announced, we have taken some significant cost cutting measures to realign our cost structure that included more than a 10% headcount reduction. This, combined with the expected growth in revenues over the coming quarters, will enable us to return to profitability. We expect to resume revenue growth due to the proliferation of our new NovaScan 3090 in the Copper-CMP and Optical CD markets. Despite the reduction in our expenses, we remain fully dedicated to continuing our investment in the next generation metrology systems.

Dr. Dishon concluded, In its April 2005 report, Dataquest projected a 13% growth in 2005 with respect to the thin film metrology market. With our offering of new products with enhanced measurement capabilities, we expect a very large market opportunity when market conditions improve. With our strong cash position, we feel that we have the financial resources to manage through this downturn.
