Additional information regarding the participants in the proxy solicitation and a description of their direct and indirect interests, by security holdings or otherwise, is contained in the preliminary joint proxy statement/prospectus filed with the SEC.

The following is a communication to Mellon employees regarding 2007 Mellon Town Hall meetings.

[Title] Open Dialogue

[Deck] Bob Kelly and Steve Elliott kick off the 2007 Town Hall meetings

When you put a group of Mellon employees in a room together, it's never long before they strike up a pretty spirited conversation. Add to the mix Bob Kelly and Steve Elliott, and the dialogue is guaranteed to become even livelier.

This scenario is exactly what's been playing out across the Corporation as the 2007 Town Hall meetings get underway providing an opportunity for Bob and Steve to open a dialogue regarding Mellon's business performance and the proposed merger with The Bank of New York (BNY).

Since announcing the proposed merger in December, we've consistently told employees that we plan to communicate, communicate, said Bob. The Town Hall meetings provide us with the chance to do just that. These forums are a great opportunity for Steve and I to meet with employees, discuss how our business is doing, talk about the merger announcement and related integration planning issues, and answer any and all of the questions that employees have.

[Subtitle] Hot Topics

Since the start of 2007, Town Hall meetings have been held in New York and Pittsburgh. Additional meetings are planned through May in Miami, London, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Boston.

Across the board, Town Hall meetings focus on two major issues: Mellon's business performance and the proposed merger with The Bank of New York. For the first part of each meeting, Bob focuses on the state of the union, including recent business wins, financial performance, the growth of Mellon's businesses, the expansion of offices and the performance of recent acquisitions such as Walter Scott & Partners and ClearTran.

After a discussion of business performance, Bob moves toward a conversation about the proposed merger with The Bank of New York, including background on BNY and its history and the rationale behind the proposed transaction.

This merger will make us stronger and more competitive, said Bob at one Town Hall meeting. It will lead to more and better opportunities for the combined business and for our employees.

For the second half of the merger discussion, Bob hands the meeting over to Steve, who focuses on providing employees with an overview of the integration planning process, including progress to date and future plans. At each of the already completed Town Hall meetings, Steve has focused on discussing the three stages of integration planning. The first phase includes the business line and shared service presentations regarding their proposed joint vision for their organizations after the merger closes. The second phase is planning for the close of the proposed transaction scheduled for the third quarter of 2007 and all Day One activities. The third stage, to be completed in May, involves creating an operating plan for the combined new company's first year.

[Subtitle] Creating a Forum

Each Town Hall meeting concludes with an extensive question-and-answer session, creating an open, transparent forum in which employees have the opportunity to speak directly to Bob and Steve. At a recent Pittsburgh meeting, questions ranged from those of local interest – for instance, how Mellon is working with local officials to head off a public transportation crisis – to merger-related questions, including how the new company’s brand will be created, how diversity issues are being factored into integration planning and what role consultants are playing in the integration planning process.

In recent weeks, Bob has also had the opportunity to answer questions from BNY employees. On January 23, February 6 and February 21, Bob joined Tom Renyi, BNY chairman and chief executive officer, and Gerald Hassell, BNY president, at a meeting with BNY’s senior officers. Additional meetings are planned for future dates.
