Welcome to e-Merger News

Of course it's the talk of employees at every coffee machine, in every break room and at every lunch table across the BellSouth region. What will the announced merger between BellSouth and the new AT&T mean to our company to me?

This new electronic employee publication, e-Merger News, is designed to help answer questions and clarify issues related to the merger. As information becomes available, we will provide it to you through e-Merger News.

The issue: Merging corporate cultures

BellSouth has a long and well-respected tradition of providing outstanding service to its customers, its communities and its employees. It also has strong ideas about where the telecom business is going, what products and services our customers are going to need, and how to best use our resources to meet those needs.

The concept of combining our heritage and our vision with those of another company leaves customers, communities and employees alike wondering how we can protect and maintain the relationships, the reputation and the business objectives we've worked so hard to develop. In short, we want to know, How does AT&T's corporate culture line up with ours?

1

Why is this important?

Key to any corporate merger is the ability of the two organizations to combine their cultures successfully.

We owe it to our customers and the communities in which we live and work to make sure they continue to reap the benefits that being associated with BellSouth has afforded them.

2

Where do we stand?

As information about the announced merger has unfolded over the last week, we've had the opportunity to learn more about how AT&T's philosophies line up with BellSouth's.

Randall Stephenson, AT&T's chief operating officer (COO), makes these points about our companies' cultural alignment:

We share the same heritage.

We have the same vision regarding community service and contributions.

We share the priority of valuing employees at all levels.

We have the same vision regarding the wireless and directory businesses and we already are partners in both, through Cingular Wireless and YELLOWPAGES.COM.

We have the same vision for broadband.

Where do we stand? continued

We face the same issues and share the same positions on providing video service and on competing with cable companies.

The common thread of focusing on providing reliable service runs through both.

Stephenson also makes these points about our current relationship:

We've already made some bold decisions together through our highly successful joint ventures, Cingular Wireless and YELLOWPAGES.COM.

Our chairmen have a good working relationship.

AT&T (then SBC) exhibited its commitment to BellSouth and its customers through its efforts in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

BellSouth Chief Operating Officer Mark Feidler, who was Cingular's COO when Stephenson was its chairman, adds these similarities:

BellSouth and AT&T have chosen the same vendors for broadband services.

We've successfully managed both Cingular Wireless and YELLOWPAGES.COM on a 50/50 basis.

Our chief technology officers have served together on standard-setting bodies for broadband, DSL and fiber deployment.

We compete against the same wireless and cable companies.

We're more similar than we're different, concludes Feidler.

3

The bottom line: Preserving our culture

As employees, it's up to us to make sure the BellSouth way of doing business—whether it's providing reliable service, promoting our products and services, developing innovative ways to meet our customer's needs, or volunteering in our communities—carries on through the merger and beyond. The heritage and the values we share with AT&T place us in a unique position to do just that.
